

"I saw a good investment and I went for it."

Volodymyr Taratunskiy and his family from the village Kyrnasivka in the Vinnitsa region in Ukraine have been in the poultry business for 20 years. They produce and sell breeders and chickens. All raised in cages.

Best possible investment

–It is a tough and volatile market, and I need to stay competitive. I always look for the best possible investments and I constantly try to optimize my business. I have always been troubled by a drop in performance in the cages closest to the side wall air inlets in my existing houses with negative pressure ventilation. Especially during winter this always causes stressed birds and performance drop says Volodymyr.

A quite different system

–When visiting one of my colleagues in 2012 I saw a ventilation system from DACS in Denmark, and there was no doubt in my mind that this system just did a better job. To this my colleague claimed that he had reduced his cost for heating by up to 40% explains Volodymyr.

Convincing performance

The DACS ventilation system at Volodymyr Taratunskiys place has now been in operation since spring 2013. The system has surpassed all his expectations - and the 40 % cut in heat consumption is there. One should think that this would affect the climate in the house, but Volodymyr Taratunskiy has only positive things to say about the system.

I saw a good investment

–The 40 % cut in heating is there, and I have a very stable climate in the house no matter the time of the year. The air quality is very good, there is absolutely no draft and the constant flow of temperate air ensures that the house stays dry. With my DACS system I will be able to stay competitive because I have reduced my costs and the birds in this house perform better. I saw a good investment and went for it concludes Volodymyr.
